It appears, sadly, that Google was indeed contemplating a coordinated, multinational hostile takeover attempt of Epic in response to Fortnite launching outside of Google Play.

protocol.com

Google discussed teaming up with Tencent to take over Epic Games. Unredacted court documents reveal more details about Google's strategies for protecting the Google Play store.

Google calculated a potential revenue loss of $6 billion resulting from Epic competing with Google Play and showing other companies the way. Rather than competing by giving developers a better deal than 30%, they wanted to collude to crush Epic instead.

Then there's Google's secret "Project Hug" to pay off publishers to not compete with Google Play by rebating 5% of store fees - but financially characterizing the transactions as YouTube deals, cloud service discounts, etc. Shady stuff.

Judge Donato our in California ordered the Google App Store antitrust suits to be filed in unredacted form. You can now read Epic's here: storage.courtlistener.com/recap/gov.usco...

@GeOforceBE I mean here "Get Epic into 'newer' markets this is way to crush Google and innovate new things get to attract great people with great minds" I made a typing mistake previously just to correct (newer) not (never) don't you pay studios to keep them exclusive to your platform? so its only bad when other people do it?

The Epic Games Store pays for PC store exclusive games. It has 15% market share and its #1 competitor has 80%+ market share. We put out press releases announcing these exclusives. We and our partners account for them as payments for exclusives.

Everybody know that Tencent is an evil company. They help gov to control & spy Chinese people and monopoly Chinese game market. I don't understand why google want to team up tencent. Do evil? Do monopoly?

This makes a lot more sense now given this development, and recent ABK cultural developments over the past few weeks. Wow

As someone that worked with that company 20 years ago (affiliate and beta tester), one of my College teachers was colleague of the founders, I can say my respect for Google kept decreasing over the years.
